Reiki (pronounced rāy-key) is a Japanese term: “rei” meaning “Higher Power” or “Spiritual” and “ki” meaning “universal life force energy.” Ki, or Qi (pronounced “chee”), the vital life force, is also referred to as Prana (Hindu), Mana (Polynesian) or Spiritus (Christian).

Reiki works on the assumption that each of us knows more about what is necessary for our healing than anybody else. It works with that innate “knowing” part of us that created, caused, allowed or participated in the problem and therefore knows the antidote or solution. Reiki bypasses the symptom and goes to the cause of the problem to allow healing and reconnection to self. Thus Reiki is totally complementary to any of form of healing treatment or medication being utilized.

When activated, Reiki addresses body, mind and spirit, accelerating the ability to heal one’s self. Reiki is experienced through the hands as a powerful yet unobtrusive flow of healing energy. It is important to note that Reiki energy is not mind power. It is spiritual in nature, and therefore cannot be directed or manipulated in any way.

Metaphysics & Reiki

Metaphysics is an exciting way of looking at illness and “dis-ease” in order to extract the “self” from the problem to get a view of the overall picture instead of seeing merely the “symptom.”

Reiki II: Distant Healing

Since spirit—that part of each of us unbound by time and space—operates outside of the realm of the physical, Reiki II works in the transcendent “oneness” within the practitioner and the realization that there is no separation between us. It can bring healing at a distance to people, animals, places, events and situations. Perhaps across even the greatest illusion, that of time.

Reiki & Psychotherapy

Since learning Reiki, I have found the practice of psychotherapy transformed. I frequently begin working with clients by including a Reiki II session as part of the intake process. In this way clients access their own Complementary & Alternative Medicine (CAM) combines the therapies & philosophies of conventional medicine with those of alternative treatments & modalities such as acupuncture, herbal medicine, naturopathy & biofeedback.

“inner healers.” I then assist clients in deepening their understanding of the healing process, as well as weaving in dream work, journaling, meditation, breath work and therapeutic dialog. ॐ

we are One.*
